GREETING FROM PRESIDENT HAUSMAN

Jeff Hausman, AIA
AIA Michigan President

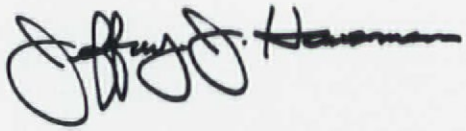

Each year the AIA Michigan President in consultation with the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors develops the focus for the year. Our focus for 2006 is "Designing a Better Michigan through the AIA". We have based our focus on the AIA mission of advocacy, education and fellowship.

The AIA directory is a great resource for learning about AIA Architects of Michigan. There are profiles of most of the firms, listing their principals, their specialties, their history and how to contact them. All AIA members are listed with addresses and phone numbers. Also our Professional Affiliate members are listed with their contact information.

The directory includes important information about AIA Michigan such as local chapter areas, our Code of Ethics, History, Bylaws and Recognition of our members who have received Honor Awards for their excellence in our profession

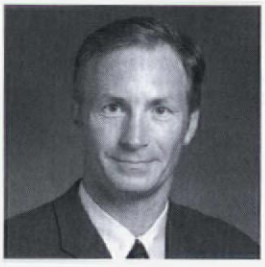

The directory is also a tool that the public can use in getting to know us and to help them begin the process of making and informed decision about selecting an architect to work with. The article on "How to Hire Your Architect" demystifies the working relationship between architect and client.

One of the goals of our society is to organize and unite our members to continuously improve our profession. An important element in this process is sharing information among the creators of the built environment and members of our communities. Architecture is an important part of our everyday life. It is our job to design ways to enhance the quality of the built environment, conserve our natural resources and protect the health, safety and welfare of the public. We need to work together to Design a Better Michigan the AIA can help. This Directory can help you.

Jeff Hausman, AIA
AIA Michigan President

2006 DIRECTORY ISSUE

Matt Rossetti, AIA
Editor

In this issue of PLACE, the magazine of AIA Michigan Architecture, we have included perspectives and perceptions on our profession from clients, consultants and writers in our industry. Clients are the lifeblood of our industry, as is relevant feedback on the profession, and it is important to pay attention to what is being said on the other side of the fence as it impacts us all. I particularly stressed to each of these writers to not sugar coat their feelings if they had criticisms, but to help us critique our own ways in order to improve them. It has been said that architects are control freaks with enormous egos that consider the world revolving around architecture and design [doesn't it?]. We are frustrated artists who speak in our own language. I would submit that while some or most of this is true, architects, through their training and sensibilities are able to view issues more holistically than most other professions. Architects are trained to think with both sides of the brain....something that is sorely lacking in our country where the left side of the brain has over ruled the right for centuries. Daniel Pink and other progressive thought leaders have described a change in tide, where the MFA will become the new MBA of tomorrow. In other words, concepts of holistic thinking and emotional intelligence will play a far greater role in defining where the United States is heading if we are to transition into the creative, thinking country that we should be - one that will continue to lead the world, not simply with our economy or military, but through our creativity in technology and thinking.

The PLACE Directory Issue and the Awards Issue will be changing in the future to update our approach for the AIA Michigan magazine. The directory issue has in the past been flooded with all sorts of information that is either available on the website, belongs elsewhere or is excessive. We will be moving much of the bylaws and lists of names to the website, while focusing on the content more relevant for a true directory issue: the names of Michigan's AIA architects and AIA MI firms. 'Placemakers' will continue to be highlighted with descriptions for those firms that pay to be highlighted in specific areas of expertise, while those firms not participating in Placemakers will simply be listed in this issue. This is a great way to showcase your firms' abilities for very few bucks and add to our bottom line to cover costs and lower dues.

In the 2007 Directory Issue and the upcoming Awards Issue that will come out in the Winter of 2007, we will be adding an editorial section based on industry expertise, starting with Mixed Use and shifting later to Education, Residential, Interiors and Graphics, Sports and Fitness, Health Care, Hospitality and finally, Office. Plan on participating in these future issues so you don't miss a great opportunity for free publicity and positive exposure throughout the industry. I say this in each issue with limited response, but I will continue until it catches on. The success of this magazine depends on your responses, your interest and your involvement. We offer opportunities for people in your firms at all levels and all backgrounds to contribute with articles [within the Features of the Departments] or interesting work happening within your firms [Under the Radar] or on their own time [After Hours]. For anyone reading this and thinking they would like to participate and not sure of the time commitment, shoot me an email and I will be happy to work with your schedule to figure out how to get you involved. PLACE, and the profession of architecture, depend on relevant contributions from all of us. Thanks

Editor

Services of AIA Michigan

AIA Michigan

AIA Michigan stands behind its members with a wide range of programs. AIA members benefit from services that keep them informed, protect their interests, increase appreciation of the role that the architect plays in protecting the health and safety of the public and provides the architect with the tools that heighten their efficiency and effectiveness.

MISSION

The Mission of AIA Michigan is to organize and unite its members to continuously improve the profession and to enhance their positions as leaders of the building team and designers of the built environment. This Mission is achieved by means of:

- Public Advocacy by developing and disseminating policies that enhance the natural and built environment; and by influencing legislation and regulatory policy that impacts the effectiveness of the profession.
- Education of the public to the value of the profession; education of members to a higher standard of practice; and education of students to the changing needs of the profession.
- Fellowship through activities that promote interaction between the members and allied professionals.

OUR FOCUS

- PUBLIC ADVOCACY

  As the collective voice of the architectural profession in the state, AIA Michigan makes sure that its concerns and interests are heard by key decision makers in Lansing. AIA Michigan monitors of all regulatory matters affecting the profession.

  - Government Affairs - This committee and a legislative counsel in Lansing works to produce positive results for the profession. Ongoing activities include the monitoring of legislative issues for interior designers, landscape architects, homebuilders, and school construction. A plan has been developed to strengthen and build industry coalitions among the members of the construction industry. We are working on Certificate of Merit legislation with the Michigan Society of Professional Engineers (MSPE) and the American Council of Engineering Companies Michigan (ACEC Michigan)
  - Communications - PLACE Magazine, The Bulletin Newsletter and Website - aiami.com.
  - Professional Licensing - Efforts to enforce licensing laws and prosecute unlicenced practitioners is an ongoing priority.
  - Minute Person Program - Every member is listed in a data base by home address and congressional district. This makes it possible to contact members immediately for crucial Legislative Alerts. This is done in conjunction with the national office of the American Institute of Architects.
  - Architects' Political Action Committee (APAC) - Funds are raised, separate from dues dollars, to be used to support the campaigns of legislative candidates who understand the important role that architects play in creating a liveable environment for Michigan.

- EDUCATION

  AIA Michigan boosts the public's awareness and appreciation of the unique services and contributions that architects provide, enhancing visibility and stature among both clients and the community.

  - Continuing Education - Continuing education is a mandatory requirement for AIA membership. AIA Michigan offers educational programs throughout the state to enable every architect to attain the required credits.
  - Design Conference - Architects present their work in a relaxed, informal setting at Torch Lake each Fall. Camaraderie, young architects, lesser known firms and affordable prices take a front seat.
  - Intern Development Program (IDP) - AIA Michigan coordinates chapter activities and works with national AIA on this mandatory program.

- FELLOWSHIP

- Honor Awards - This 41-year-old program promotes Michigan architects by raising the public's awareness of design excellence.
- Mid-Summer Conference - This family-oriented conference celebrates its 63rd year on Mackinac Island in August. It is a major fund raising event. Architects are joined by engineers, contractors and vendors.
- Receptions - The Holiday Open House at the Beaubien House in December is an important social occasion that promotes fellowship and celebrates architecture and those who create it.
- Recognitions - The achievements of individual members are recognized through the AIA Michigan Gold Medal, the Hastings Award, the President's Award, and Young Architect Award. Honorary Affiliate membership is conveyed upon people who have made notable contributions to architecture but are not otherwise eligible for membership. A Legislator of the Year is also honored.

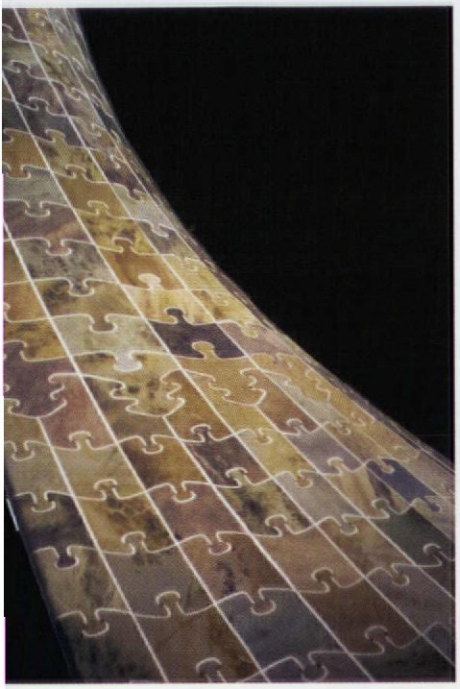

SERVICES

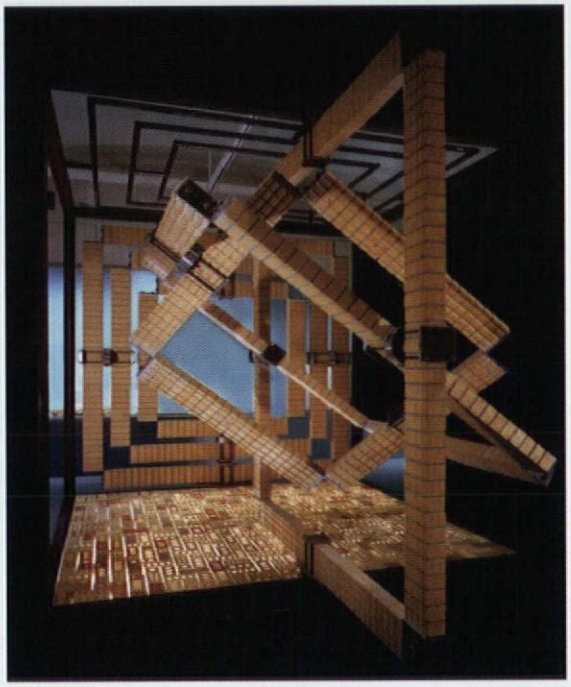

- Architect Referral - Firms and individuals calling AIA Michigan in search of an architect are handled on an individual basis. PLACEMAKERS is sent to them as a resource for licensed architects.
- BOCA Library - A resource library of building codes is retained in the Beaubien House through the AIA Detroit Building Codes and Regulations Committee.
- Bulletin - The newsletter is a vehicle for internal communication and is mailed twice a year and e-mailed regularly to all members and it appears on the web site.
- Documents - AIA Michigan is a full-service distributor of contract documents, available at special prices to members.
- Insurance - In Michigan, special group rates on homeowners and auto insurance are available through Hartland Insurance. Information is available on the AIA Benefit Trust and professional liability insurance is offered by Professional Concepts Insurance Agency as well.
- Job Referral - AIA Maintains a Jobs Board on the website at AIAMI.COM and publishes want ads in the newsletter for architects seeking job opportunities.
- Membership Directory - Published annually in PLACE Architecture Michigan Magazine.
- PLACE - The official magazine of AIA Michigan is distributed periodically to architects, libraries and municipalities, business and professional organizations.
- PLACEMAKERS, a directory of architectural firms is published in the directory edition of Place Architecture Michigan Magazine.
- WEB SITE - AIAMI.COM contains most of the information that is in the directory and includes photos of the most recent design awards, a listing of the members and their firms and information on upcoming programs. AIA contract documents can also be ordered on the WEB.

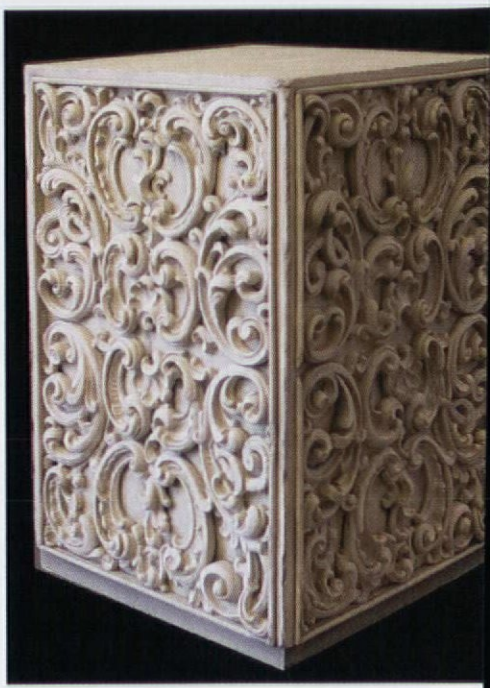

Since 1887 in Michigan "AIA" after an architect's name means that this person is an honorable member of the American Institute of Architects. It is a proud tradition and it will become more important as we move into the 21st Century.

Client Perspectives on Working with Architects

By Angela Jeruzal

When it comes to working with an architect, clients have a variety of perspectives on their experiences. Often, those perspectives are shaped by many factors, including a client's expectations going into a project (and whether those expectations were fulfilled in the end); how educated the client is on the architectural process itself; the architect/client relationship that developed throughout the experience; and certainly, the perceptions they had about working with architects before the project even began.

Of course, the best way to gain client perspectives on working with architects is to talk with actual clients themselves. Frank Taylor, CEO of Detroit-based Southern Hospitality Restaurant Group, has worked with Hannah Murano Architecture on the interiors for four out of his five Detroit restaurants. "What I wanted was to create a unique ambiance in my restaurants, because dining is an experience that goes beyond just the menu," said Taylor. "As a long-time restaurateur, I knew that the only way to do that was to work with an architect who could capture the uniqueness of each space and set the tone for the impression we wanted to make." Taylor's restaurants are designed with interesting attention to detail and incorporate existing natural and built environment elements including The Detroit River, historic architectural detail, and plenty of natural light.

Janice Steinhardt, a residential architectural client who is working on her second house with McIntosh Poris Architects, has discovered that working with an architect is an educational process, and that developing a good working relationship where both architect and client listen to one another is essential. Steinhardt likely has a better understanding of the architectural process – as a kitchen designer, she addresses similar issues in her own profession every day.

"I've learned that, even if you walk into a project with a clear idea of what you want, you need to stay open minded and be willing to modify your vision," said Steinhardt. "Sometimes, there is no right or wrong way, but there is a solution that works best for the site or the project – and sometimes that isn't apparent to the client or the architect when the project begins."

PRECONCEIVED NOTIONS ABOUT WORKING WITH AN ARCHITECT

Even before beginning a project, a potential client's perceptions are often shaped by public attitudes and misinformation about working with architects. One client, who wished to remain anonymous, stated, "I had heard before that working with an architect is an expensive process; that too often, architects fail to take into account the building site and constructability issues of some projects; and that some (architects) even had a reputation of failing to adhere to a schedule. As a result, I had developed a somewhat clouded opinion because of that isolated negative feedback." He continued, "In my own experience, while I found that working with an architect wasn't inexpensive, in the end it was money well spent, and all of the preconceived notions I had formed about the difficulty in working with an architect were unfounded."

Another major hurdle in the client relationship is the misunderstanding of the architect's responsibilities. Paul Dickinson, president of Integrated Architecture (which has offices in Grand Rapids and Ann Arbor) says there is such a broad spectrum of understanding as to what architects do. "There is certainly a misconception that architecture is only about the aesthetics of a building, when in fact, health, safety and welfare issues are architectural, and issues on which our (architectural) licensing process is based. Our profession has done such a great job keeping people safe that clients take for granted that architects are held professionally to an incredibly high standard of care on these issues."

Often, cost becomes the overriding issue, so many clients take the architectural drawings – and run, said Michael Poris, a principal at McIntosh Poris Architects. "While a client can save money by not having the architect involved throughout construction, they don't understand that the contractor might not be following the plans exactly. When the client has to go back and correct contractor mistakes after the fact, the project ends up costing a lot more in the end."

THE IMPORTANCE OF DEVELOPING A GOOD CLIENT/ARCHITECT RELATIONSHIP

So how important is developing a good client relationship in shaping public perception about working with architects? Very, according to Poris. "When you begin work with a new client, you are really embarking on a long-term relationship, one that involves something that is permanent, and very personal – especially if you're designing someone's home. Every client is different, so going into the relationship with an open mind is very important. Maintaining client relationships requires an investment of time and personal effort over the long-term."

Of course, the intention of design professionals should be to go into every project with the goal of creating an experience for clients that will leave them with a good perspective on working with architects. Said Poris, "Clients should feel that their voice is being heard and that their concerns are being addressed. And certainly, clients need to remain involved and integral to the process, in order to have a sense of ownership of the design. They'll always take pride in something they have envisioned and helped to shape."

UNDERSTANDING THE PROCESS OF WORKING WITH AN ARCHITECT

From an architects' point of view, the best kind of client is one that grows during the course of the relationship, understands the process of working with an architect and is knowledgeable.

Dr. John Hoeffler, superintendent of Birmingham Public Schools, is certainly well-versed on working with an architect. Since being named district superintendent in 1990, he has been closely involved in the process of building new and renovating the district's existing schools. The district, which conducts a bidding process for all of its architectural work, based on factors including competitive pricing, success on similar projects and willingness to engage decision makers in the design process, is currently working with TMP Associates Architects in Bloomfield Hills. "We have many facilities that pose a unique set of challenges, as well as newer building construction. And schools today have to meet the needs of the community as well as the students; it's a new way of thinking about school buildings."

Hoeffler continued, "Part of what has made working with our current architects such a good experience is that they understand our process. The district's charter calls for stakeholder involvement in initiatives such as deciding how our schools should look. Our architectural firm very willingly involves parents, students and staff in design committee meetings at the site so that the needs of everyone are taken into account. Our board members also are updated regularly, and questions and concerns get addressed in a timely manner. I think that says a lot about the firm's approach and commitment to their clients."

Hoeffler adds, "Our projects have either finished on time or ahead of schedule, and on budget, which is significant, when you usually hear negative feedback about projects meeting with delays having cost overruns. I think it is a case of people in general being inclined to share more about their negative as opposed to positive experiences."

"I think as a client, you can develop a short checklist of criteria to evaluate your experience with the architect," said Hoeffler. "Did the architect you worked with stay within your budget and timeline; did they stick closely to the overall design concept discussed; were they responsive, and did the design work well with the intended function of the building?"

Architects consistently agree that better public awareness about architecture and education on the process of working with an architect is essential in understanding how the process works, and continuing to gather feedback is crucial to improving the profession and building clientele.

Client Janice Steinhardt has a very enlightened perspective based on the work with her architect: "In my experience, working with an architect produced only positives. I was open minded and receptive to changes, and I understood that there wasn't necessarily a right way or wrong way to do what I wanted to do. My architect took the time to build a working relationship with me and to cultivate my trust. And, like with anything else, you get professional work when you hire professionals."

Quality Through the Car Window

By JC Cataldo

Growing up in the mid1960s, my father would take me on what he would call "house hunting" trips. These would entail putting me in the back seat of the car and aimlessly driving around new subdivisions looking at houses that were for sale. I don't think he ever had any intention of buying anything. He simply enjoyed the time in the car and the dream of living in a newly constructed home. As he would pull up to a prospective home, it was interesting how he would evaluate the quality of its construction. His statements were either, "He's a good builder" or "He's a bad builder". Considering that my father never once got out of the car to walk through the home, I couldn't figure out how he could determine the "quality" of the home. As a five year old, I considered him a construction genius – one of those who could clairvoyantly traverse the innards of a built structure, analyzing and qualifying wood species, assembly techniques and joinery without ever having to leave the confines of his car.

Years later, I realized how, while driving at 25 miles per hour, he could deduce the "quality" of construction. It didn't have anything to do with construction – He was really evaluating the architecture and transposing his acceptance of the design onto the builder as a gauge of construction quality.

This lesson has not been lost on me. Having spent 25 years as a builder/developer, I realize that the majority of buyers don't know the difference between a taping knife and a biscuited miter. To them, both sound as though they should be in the kitchen. No, most of the public evaluate a home's construction quality based on what they can see, and in the case of people like my father, good architecture equates to being good builder.

Years ago, our firm made a conscious decision that subsequently dictated our future. That decision, was, Design Matters. Obviously, we didn't come up with the phrase. Truth be told, I heard it for the first time just a few months ago. We were less prosaic about it and simply decided to build homes that we liked. Using my father as a "reference point", we figured that most clients would evaluate our workmanship based upon whether or not they found the design pleasing. We felt, that no matter how well constructed a home was, if it wasn't well designed, properly proportioned and aesthetically pleasing, we wouldn't be advancing in our industry. Yes, those are all subjective terms, but we felt that if we wrapped our arms firmly around design, we would stand out in a very crowded field.

To this day, I would say it was the most important business decision we made. We have found that to compete in the market based on price is a treacherous road as there is always someone who will build it cheaper. Electing to build good quality design however, is something that sets you apart from the competition, as "quality" is most often viewed with design as its face value.

Currently, he is co-developer for the Art Center Town and Carriage Homes, an 83-unit townhouse development in Downtown Detroit and 55 West, a reconstruction of a 42,000 square foot former warehouse into 30 unit residential loft condominiums.

A Developer's Perspective on Architects

Gregory J. Erne

The Role of the Architect in Society. Architects have always served a vital role in society. The creation of spaces, whether a small building or the reconfiguration of a major public space, influences our lives for better or for worse. Thus, the architect is charged with taking the constraints of a particular project and making the best possible solution. With this charge comes great responsibility since the impact on society can not be modeled by a computer. What architects create will have an impact for decades and once created can not be easily undone or changed.

The weight of this great responsibility is often balanced by the fact that the architect is but one element in the creation of spaces. The architect's role and creative talent needs to be balanced by the reality of the project. Some architects successful take on this challenge with much enthusiasm, while others do not. In my opinion, this factor differentiates the truly good architects from the rest. The projects that I commission need an architect who can work within in the objectives of the project and find the best solution possible.

From the perspective of the real estate developer, hiring the right architect for each job is the most important factor that will dictate the short, and long, term success of any project. As important is setting realistic goals and objectives about the project for the assembled team to formulate the solution around. These goals and objectives need to be ranked and prioritized and continually re-evaluated and assessed in order for any project to be a success.

From a personal perspective, having worked on dozens of projects throughout the country, my experience with architects has been very positive. I believe that it can be credited with the way in which expectations and goals have been established. It is conceivable that those very same experiences could have been harrowing if the team had not solidified effectively.

Architecture for Next Generation. For architects to truly have the impact on society that they should, they need to become more influential in the development process. Being active in many different organizations such as the American Institute of Architects (AIA), the Urban Land Institute and the Congress for the New Urbanism (CNU) has given me good perspective on where the profession is heading and how architects can help us get there. Architects should use their professional organizations, such as the AIA and (CNU), to educate the public and the development community. The reason I indicate they should lean on such organizations is that the profession is comprised largely of small firms and sole proprietors who can not wield any significant influence alone. Another area for improvement that could make a marked difference for an architect is good basic project management expertise. Many times I have encountered an architect or a firm that does not have a good solid grasp on how to manage a project to a client's expectations. As much as the responsibility lies with a developer to set expectations early, it lies equally with the architect to ask what the expectations are and try and help the client set realistic expectations. To many architects, including a good project management or technical person to the team will add instant credibility. Additionally, having strategic alliances or solid business relationships with other consultants could add a dimension to the project team that the architect does not have.

The last area of improvement for the profession that I would indicate needs improvement is better access to market research or information that is important to the client. Too many times I have seen a solution from one market transferred, verbatim, to another market without any consideration of the market influences. In some cases it works but in many instances market conditions demand a slightly different approach to the creation of a solution.

First, and foremost, architects must get more involved in organizations outside of the AIA and CNU, as well as getting other organizations involved in the AIA and CNU. By getting in the trenches with the development community, understanding what drives the decisions to develop and being at the forefront of those decisions.

I believe that we are at the beginning of what could signal significant change for the architect. Society is demanding better solutions from developers, and developers in turn will turn to their consultants and advisors to meet those demands. Some of the mistakes of the past in terms of planning, design, materials and trends are taking hold and the responsibility for righting those wrongs will fall to the architect. By understanding the trends, making the right employment decisions, networking within and outside of the profession, and understanding that each project requires a specific solution unto itself, the architect of the future can be in a position to influence the health of society for decades to come.

WORKING WITH ARCHITECTS: An Engineer's Perspective

By Peter J. Basso, PE; Professional Affiliate Member

Through more than 40 years working with architects, there have been countless highs along with an occasional disappointment.

I personally find it very exciting to be part of a design team for a significant project, where our contribution can have a meaningful impact on the success of the project. Our firm also does a substantial amount of work under direct contract to the owner. These projects are often challenging and have their own rewards and sense of accomplishment. However, the "fun" jobs are architectural projects which are significant in their size and/or uniqueness.

The main determinant in whether a project turns out to be an exciting experience or a disappointment is the specific project team, with the project manager being the key. Invariably, the successful projects have been led by strong and capable project managers who are organized, do effective planning and keep the project team informed and truly working together in the best interests of the owner, as well as the team members.

The majority of disappointments we have experienced are generally the result of various aspects of poor project management. These primarily include:

Allowing architectural changes right up to, and beyond, the time a project is issued for bidding. Not only is this time consuming and costly, but it also dramatically increases the likelihood for errors.

Unrealistic schedules, which are hard on the project team members and on quality. Sometimes unrealistic schedules are unavoidable, but an attempt at negotiating a more reasonable schedule is not always pursued, and it is not always made clear that, due to reduced time for coordination, there will likely be more issues that will have to be resolved during construction. Increasingly, we find that even under severely compressed design schedules, there is little, if any, tolerance for a less than perfect set of documents.

Even worse is the condition where we work in good faith to a tight deadline, essentially completing our part of the design, then have the schedule extended by a substantial amount. Our past experience has been that substantial and continuous architectural changes get made during this extension period. This is truly disastrous. Team members should be kept informed of important schedule developments so that they can plan their work to avoid extensive rework.

Inexperienced project managers with inadequate direction and support. Under these conditions projects sometimes advance to a substantial degree of completion before being adequately reviewed. Major changes that could have been noted and changed at a much earlier stage are then made, resulting in wasteful rework for the entire design team.

Narrow focus, rather than big picture viewpoint. Occasionally, we find one element of the project being optimized at the expense of another. An example is where structural may be optimized by using deeper members, thereby reducing the weight and cost of the structural steel system. However, this may be more than offset by increased mechanical and other system costs, due to reduced space for ductwork, piping and other system components. Tighter clearances also can make future changes much more difficult to accommodate, which can be an important factor, particularly for certain building types.

Inability to agree on mechanical equipment space requirements and ceiling space requirements for ductwork, piping, cable tray and other system components. There are two sides to this issue. Engineer's sometimes exasperate this problem by requesting more space than is ultimately required, at least in part because these decisions are made early in the design process, and there are many unknowns at that time. The architect, sensing this, and based on past experience, provides less than what has been requested. We find this to be less of an issue with project managers with whom we have a long history of working together.

No article of this type would be complete without a discussion of fees. For most of our architectural clients, we have "standard" fee arrangements. This represents significant savings in time that would otherwise be spent if we had to negotiate the fee for each project from scratch. Where deviations from the standard arrangement are called for, they are handled on a job-by-job basis. This arrangement works well and is efficient. For other clients, fees are generally established on job-by-job basis. We always strive for flexibility in the areas of fees and deliverables, recognizing that this is an area where one size definitely does not fit all. Fee negotiations sometimes take time, but in nearly all cases, there is enough flexibility on both sides to reach an agreement that is satisfactory to both parties.

Associated with fees are collections. Periodically, over the years, we have had clients fall behind in their payments. At times this has been significant enough to impact our own operations. We have always tried to cooperate and help in any way we can to reach a satisfactory resolution. At times it has been trying, but we have had very few bad outcomes in this regard.

In summary, although there are issues we would prefer didn't exist, as in any profession or business, on balance working in an architectural environment is stimulating, challenging and rewarding. It makes for a very satisfying engineering career and architects are nice people to associate and work with.

Perspectives on Collaborative Relationships with Architects

By Ron Harwood

There have been significant changes in the design world over the last decade. In many cases sub-consultants have risen to levels of importance that could not have been predicted, and in others, they have become a necessity, a nuisance and at least a commodity.

In the Detroit metro market, the competition for architectural projects is so intense that sub-consultants have been driven to commoditize their product to the extent that there is no reward or payback to creativity. How fast and mostly how inexpensive the project can be designed for becomes a high priority. Once a project becomes a reality and is awarded to a design architect, the glow of a real collaboration seems to wane and instead speed, budget and timely turnaround become the focus of contracts. Further, we have seen a greater division between the design architect and the architect of record. Often, the design architect's work does not carry through far enough into construction documents, where the design intent was to be maintained through the construction documents phase. Moreover, there is more tension between the architects, where we see the architect of record acting more as a cost control, or even taking on a value engineering role, which diminishes the relationship even more.

We see a trend on the horizon: As competition for project increases with every passing week, the teams selected by the architect often matter significantly to the owner. The owners are more aware of the talents of the sub-consultants as their work begins to be more recognized. As the RFQ and RFP processes heat up, the teams build credibility beyond just the talents of the architect. Even more compelling are the existing and successful projects that architects have in place, where the teams have been recognized as a whole.

In rare instances, the collaboration between a design architect and a creative sub-consultant like lighting, media or landscape takes on the ideal perspective. That is that the consultants create more from the collaboration than they could have with no nurturing team. Often when this occurs, the owner recognizes the group collaboration as meaningful and responds with an open mind. In other words, when the entire design team presents a holistic approach to architecture by including the sub-consultants comments and design goals, or even better, when the presentations are made as a team, the owner receives a wealth of perspective rather than one point of view.

On a more national level, the design architects seem more willing to respond to the creative skills that their sub-consultants offer. The old adage about being 250 miles from home and carrying a brief case seems to still hold true, or perhaps consultants are selected for their skills no matter where their offices are and this adds a bit of credence to their portfolio. In the end, the national work seems far more collaborative from our point of view. While there is always a control point built in to the architect's scope of work, subs seem to be invited to the party more than ever and often at a far earlier stage of design.

Detroit Architecture – Then and Now

By John Gallagher

It's hard to recapture today just how important Detroit was in the architectural world around 1950. That's when a host of modernist icons — from the St. Louis Gateway Arch to the first modern airline terminals, office parks and shopping malls — all flowed from drafting tables here.

That golden era, sadly, is long ago and far away. Just how far was captured in a New York Times article a couple of years ago. Repeating a dismal stereotype, the Times profiled a couple who run a furniture and design store who had abandoned Detroit for Las Vegas because they had found Detroit "too culturally leaden to welcome new design."

The story of how Detroit sank from architectural showcase to national afterthought is worth some study.

The key figure in the great 1950s era was Eero Saarinen, a Finnish-born architect whose father, Eliel, designed most of the campus at Cranbrook Educational Community in the '20s, '30s and '40s. After his father died in 1950, Eero turned from Eliel's Arts and Crafts-based folk architecture to modernism, and he attracted a cadre of world-class designers to Detroit to help him.
The famous and soon-to-be-famous in Saarinen's office included Cesar Pelli, Kevin Roche, Gunnar Birkerts and Robert Venturi. Meanwhile, great names like Ludwig Mies van der Rohe and R. Buckminster Fuller were working here on projects of their own. Minoru Yamasaki opened his own office.

"The Saarinen firm became well-known as a training ground for the Young Turks in architecture. Eero was the hot designer they wanted to work with," Mark Coir, director of the Cranbrook Archives in Bloomfield Hills, told me once.

Indeed, Birkerts, born in Latvia and educated in Germany, recalled how as a very young man he just showed up at Saarinen's office one day without an appointment with the hope of working with the master. Happily, he did.

Nor was Saarinen the only innovator. The first modern shopping center, Northland, created by Victor Gruen, opened here; and Mies van der Rohe crafted Lafayette Park, one of the most successful urban developments in the nation.

The centerpiece was Saarinen's General Motors Technical Center in Warren, a marriage of good design and innovative technique known as the Versailles of the industrial world.

Detroit-designed projects like Saarinen's evocative TWA Terminal at New York's Kennedy airport made the covers of architectural journals. Eero himself made the cover of Time magazine.

Then Eero died of a brain tumor at age 51 in 1961, and part of Detroit's cultural identity died with him. No one else seemed to have the clout to tell corporate big shots that good design mattered as much as mere budget constraints.

Over time, Detroit architecture no longer emerged cutting-edge and vivid; instead, it became safe, conservative and dull.
Even the occasional star architect who came here fell under the spell of the malaise. Michael Graves had built a reputation with flamboyant, controversial post-modern designs when he was hired in 1989 to create an addition for the Detroit Institute of Arts. His bland, boxy proposal for the DIA was the most un-Gravesian work of his career.

Then, too, Philip Johnson and John Burgee had virtually created postmodernism in the 1980s; their One Detroit Center tower, built in 1992, was solid and workmanlike, but just a footnote to their earlier work.

And Kohn Pedersen Fox, a Chicago firm whose 333 Wacker Drive tower in Chicago redefined the skyscraper in the '80s by gracefully curving the shape to follow a bend in the Chicago River, recently produced a classroom building for Detroit's College for Creative Studies that was little more than routine.

So what happened? Surely the long decline that's afflicted Detroit's economic base since 1950 wounded the city's cultural soul as well. And it's no surprise that our architectural designs began to fail around the same time our automotive designs turned dull and unimaginative.

Mostly, local decision-makers just didn't demand good architecture anymore.

For years this crisis in Detroit design has been acknowledged by many of our most important architects. And the failure of world-class designers like Graves, Johnson and Burgee, and Kohn Pedersen Fox to produce their best work here saddened and puzzled Detroit fans of good work.

For many, the low point came a few years ago, when the Museum of Modern Art and the Whitney Museum in New York did a joint retrospective of Mies van der Rohe's work and left out his Lafayette Park work. It's as if Detroit had disappeared from serious discussion.

Happily, there are positive signs of late. A number of younger designers today show the fervor and even anger about past mistakes that are necessary to nudge accepted standards.

Automotive design has also taken a turn for the better. Under leaders like Bob Lutz at General Motors, good design has become a selling point for American automakers again. It wasn't easy, but it's happening.

There's a new emphasis on preserving the great architecture of the past. Twenty years ago, historic preservation was something only a handle of people cared about. But now, everyone on Detroit's economic development scene, both public officials and private entrepreneurs, understands that preservation of our historic architecture is central to creating a 24/7 residential community downtown.

Speaking of historic preservation, let's also give thanks for the luminous refitting of the Guardian Building, which includes the reopening of its magnificent lobby to the public for the first time in many years.

A successful hosting of Super Bowl XL at Ford Field energized the city and spurred a remarkable upgrading of downtown Detroit. Where once we saw mostly abandoned buildings, we now see loft residential units, new shops and restaurants, a sleek new YMCA, and a thorough upgrading of sidewalks and other streetscape.

Perhaps best of all, we can celebrate that Detroit's hoped-for reclaiming of the riverfront. So far, just a few pieces of the new riverfront parks system are in place — the small Tricentennial Park on the east riverfront, and the new plaza General Motors created just outside the back door of the Renaissance Center, among other pieces. But a lot more progress is in the works for 2006, and it won't be long before Detroiters have a riverfront park system to be proud of.

Put all these projects together, and Detroit is slowly knitting together an urban landscape and an architectural aesthetic for the 21st Century.

Sooner or later, the world will notice.

Critical Success Factors in the Design and Construction Process

By Jim Sears

Having only been the project owner, there have been many opportunities over the years to witness the contributions of architects, engineers and constructors on the delivery of design and construction services. Experience suggests that we are far more successful than not, but there is certainly room for improvement and such needs are clearly a function of the individual, owner included. Positives are so few and far between, but positives are better to build upon. Accordingly, three critical success factors are offered for the readers consideration. These opinions can be applied not just to those who are students of the design and construction process, but anywhere.

Whether a project manager represents the owner, architect / engineer or constructor, it is the project manager whose performance can most easily impact the delivery of a successful project. Technical competence by itself is not enough. One can be awesome in terms of delivering results that are on-time, within budget and which satisfy designed, specified and constructed quality, but on their own one can still fail. Too often we neglect our interpersonal skills. The skill most often lacking is communication follow-up, and this when missing will do a wonderful job of adversely effecting desired performance at all levels. Failure to communicate, to follow-up on a plan or problem and to do so with urgency contributes to failure. Successful project managers and, therefore, successful projects are those who consistently demonstrate over-achieving behavior with respect to timely communication and follow-up.

Success is also affected by decisiveness and ones ability to do so in a way that maintains schedule. Inept decision-makers kill project performance. Recognizing that a decision is required, by whom and at what time is critical. Facilitating the decision making process is often our role. Causing a timely outcome through effective decisiveness is a tool which when done well, will bring about all kinds of wonderful recognition.

Finally, many of us earn our keep by being consultants. Whether we are an owner, architect / engineer, or constructor, our customers constantly expect us to make recommendation. It is not acceptable to deliver unsolved projects to our customers. The best leaders are those who recognize problems, identify and evaluate viable solutions, and then make sound recommendations that correct the issue. Frequently the final decision does not rest with us, but with someone having greater financial responsibility. Successful leaders rarely present problems without recommending solutions. Provide solutions. Give options. There is often more than one way to proceed. Successful leaders are those who demonstrate thorough assessment and make timely recommendations. Successful leaders are consultants. Replace all is often the wrong recommendation.

Finding a Qualified Architect

Selecting the best architect for your next project can be a confusing experience whether you are an individual building for the first time or part of a large organization that builds periodically, you need reliable information

To help ensure that the owners receive quality architectural services the Michigan Board of Architects examines, licenses, and regulates architects. All licensed architects have a numbered seal that they must use to stamp drawings for issuance to local building authorities. The use of the title "architect" by an unlicensed person, or the use of an architect's seal to stamp drawings not made under his or her direct supervision are both illegal practices. To find out whether an architect is licensed to practice in Michigan or to report an illegal use of the title or seal, one may call the State of Michigan Board of Architects at 517-241-9253 or go online to www:/mich.gov and locate the board of architects.

To get a license and the privilege to use the title "architect," Michigan architects will have completed a five-year degree in architectural studies. Many will have a Master of Architecture Degree. A three year internship of diversified practical training then follows a candidate's education under the direct supervisory control of a practicing licensed architect. It is only then that they are allowed to take the Architectural Registration Exam. The letters "AIA" after the name means that this architect subscribes to a Code of Ethics and works to earn Continuing Education Credits to be up-to-date on the latest building technology.

AIA Michigan offers a guide to licensed architects who publicize their experience in specific building types. PLACEMAKERS can be helpful in establishing a list of architects to consider when sending out a request for information (RFI). AIA Michigan also has a publication on Quality Based Selection (QBS) to guide owners through the selection process. A facilitator is available through QBS to work with you or your selection committee directly. Whether you plan to use the QBS procedure or your own selection process, the key is to develop definitive selection criteria.

Selecting Your Architect

Before selecting your architect you need to develop basic criteria specific to your project that can be provided to prospective architects. Basic requirements may include the following:

1. List of functions
2. Approximate size
3. Projected starting dates and occupancy dates
4. Anticipated project budget and financing
5. Required services from your architect

Next you should request information and qualifications from several architects. Successful projects result when clients and architects form cooperative professional business and, often, personal relationships. These relationships are formed early in the design process and clear communications, mutually understood expectations, and a willingness to both understand and accept their individual responsibilities are necessary for realizing a successful project.

A theme to rally around is the five C's: Chemistry, Capacity, Capability, Creativity, Commitment. The five C's focus on team resources, availability and relevant experience, design and technical skills and overall interest in your project.

Chemistry

Look at the specific architect or team of architects specifically proposed for your project and see how well they have worked on similar projects. If you are dealing with just one architect for a smaller scale project, talk to other clients he or she has worked with to obtain information. If your project is larger and requires a team of architects, talk to the users of a previous project they have worked on. You should also evaluate the data on the resume.

A second key aspect to consider is how well the architect or specific team will mesh with you and your teams' culture and values. Are there processes or techniques used by the architect that will facilitate working relationship and decision making by you or within your organization?

Has the architect or team of architects worked with clients or organizations similar to yours? Whether you are the sole authority or your organization has a hierarchy of decision makers, are the architects comfortable with your decision making structure.

Capacity

If you are satisfied with the architect or team of architects are they available for your project? Every owner is concerned about the ability of the selected architect to deliver the project effectively within the desired time frame. The real test of this question is the depth of resources available to the architect or project team. Can they handle your project schedule and adjust to changes you may require without jeopardizing other project commitments? You need data on concurrent project schedules to make this evaluation.

Typically, architects are generalists and produce a great variety of projects. Has the architect delivered projects of similar size and complexity to your project?

Capability

Architectural firms come in many sizes and types. The average firm is made up of five to ten people. Many are smaller, with one or two people, and some are very large with many professionals on their staffs.

Evaluate the experience of the architect or team of architects on recently constructed similar projects. Were these projects delivered within the required time and cost restraints? Have these projects been delivered with the level of quality that meets your expectations?

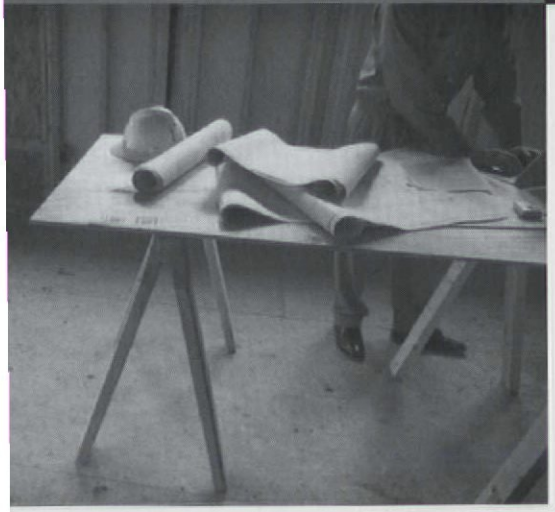

Given the architects' experience on recent projects, are they able to solve issues specific to your project? Can the architect or team guide you or your organization through the design process and build consensus with you and your key people?

How to Hire Your Architect

AIA Michigan

Creativity

Design and construction are not simple processes. No two projects are alike, and each new building brings with it a unique mixture of needs, people, location and financing. Image, function, the user, technology, environment, construction phasing, operations and cost all influence the complexity of the problem.

The creative process is a very subjective response to a given set of requirements. Interviewing the specific architect designated for your project is wise. The architect will bring an independent and fresh look at your project and suggest creative ways of meeting those needs. Ingenuity in both design and technology are equally important. The architects' design approach, including analysis of alternatives, may provide key insights that will result in a creative solution to your problem.

Looking at the architects' past work and calling client references can also be very valuable. Take the time to evaluate past performances.

Ultimately your search may yield more than one very qualified architect that meets your criteria for selection. Final choice may hinge on how interested the architect is in your project. Most thoughtful architects are as careful in selecting their clients as the clients should be in selecting their architects.

Commitment

Is this an individual or project team that you can trust with your project? Has the firm committed a key principal to the project or are they just the interview team? Do they understand emerging trends that affect you or your business and can they incorporate key elements into your project? By the firms location or by their demonstrated portfolio are they part of the fabric of the local or regional area? Do they understand community influences and concerns?

Careful evaluation of each architect should lead to an effective choice and eventually to the successful completion of your project. We create livable communities one building at a ti me. An informed client and an innovative architect do a lot to insure the quality of our built environment.

Glossary - Explanation of Member Classifications

AIA Michigan

In order to make this directory more useful for non architect readers and clients, we provide the following glossary:

AIA

Any architect who is currently entitled under state law to practice architecture is eligible to be an Architect Member. Good standing in the profession and in the community shall be demonstrated. Architect Members may use, in connection with their names and titles, "Architect Member of the American Institute of Architects."

The acronym AIA is copyrighted and its specific use is limited to an individual architect member. This designation following the name means that the architect is a member in good standing of the American Institute of Architects.

FAIA

These initials signify that an individual architect has become a Fellow in the American Institute of Architects. It means that a jury of peers has examined the architect for extraordinary accomplishments and exceptional leadership.

AIAE

The letter "E" stands for Emeritus and it signifies that an architect member has maintained membership for 15 years and has reached the age of 70; or, has reached the age of 60 and is retired; or, is incapacitated so as to be unable to work in the profession.

Associate AIA

Associate members are individuals without architectural license who meet any of the following requirements:

Employed under the supervision of an architect in a professional or technical capacity, or Faculty members in a university program in architecture, or are eligible by education or experience and are in circumstances recognized by licensing authorities as constituting credit toward architectural license, or Have a professional degree in architecture, or have an architectural license or the equivalent from a non-licensing authority and demonstrates honorable standing in the profession in the local in which they are licensed. Such persons may be residents within or outside the U.S.

Professional Affiliates are construction industry teammates such as mechanical, electrical and structural engineers, artists, planners, interior designers who complete the roster of a well-rounded professional organization.

(Editor's Note: Much of the information in the FIRM PROFILE was submitted by the individual firms listed. Although every effort was made to provide all the firms the opportunity to be listed correctly, AIA Michigan does not verify the accuracy of the information gathered from various sources. As in any directory of this size, errors may occur. We apologize for any typographical mistakes. We welcome written corrections and additions so changes can be made in subsequent editions.
Directories reflect AIAMI's records as of December 8, 2004)

placemakers

AIA Michigan

Behind every issue of PLACE are PLACEMAKERS! But where are they located? Who do I call? What is their specialty? The editors of PLACE are happy, once again, to include the Placemakers directory in this issue of PLACE magazine.

This easy to use directory features an alphabetical listing of firms with their location, specialty of practice, and a contact architect with whom to discuss your project. It is compiled as a resource for clients and other members of the building team in need of architectural service.

Participating firms are AIA Michigan members who support PLACE magazine with their projects, ideas and dollars. So take a look and find the firm best suited to your project! We are confident that it's there! For more information, please do not hesitate to contact:

- Indicate the number of hours spent in direct learning activities. Credit is not awarded for time spent on breaks, registration, travel, receptions or meals (unless an educational presentation is being offered and then credit is awarded only for educational time, not time spent eating.) 1 hour minimum (.25 for each additional quarter hour)

Check which type of activity you are reporting:

○ Self-Designed Activity

- Learning activity is self-designed. You, the learner designed the activity and determined what will be learned.
- Not acceptable for HSW credit.
- Recommended minimum of three (3) hours.

Sample categories:

☐ Research: Time you spent researching new information preparing for lectures, presentations, study-travel, committee or board research, etc.

☐ Computers: Time you spent learning new computer programs that you can apply toward the profession.

☐ Other: Briefly describe in 25 words or less

Program Description

Learning Objective: Each activity or program must have at least one learning objective related to the practice of architecture. This is a clear goal of what you the architect wanted to learn.

What new knowledge or skill did you gain from this learning activity?

Resources Used

Resources used in the completion of this activity/program?

Human resources used:

- ☐ In-house expert
- ☐ Industry representative
- ☐ Independent expert/consultant
- ☐ Practitioner in the field
- ☐ School faculty member

Other:

Material resources used:

- ☐ Journal articles
- ☐ Computer software
- ☐ Product Sample
- ☐ Teleconference
- ☐ Case Study
- ☐ Books or manuals
- ☐ Program handouts
- ☐ Video tape
- ☐ PowerPoint
- ☐ On site observations

The Quality Level does not affect the number of credits earned (AIA/CES policy starting January 1, 2000).

Research indicates that programs that involve participants and increase participation result in better and longer retention of material.

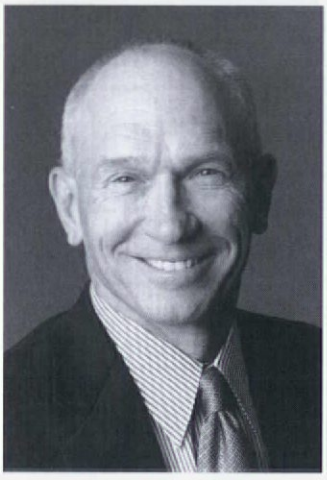

Check how this activity/program was delivered.

☐ Passive Activity
One-way communication such as lecture, speech, or panel discussion.

☐ Interactive participation
Two-way communication such as roundtable discussion, group exercises, or case studies (51% or more of the time).

☐ Measurement of Learners' Progress
Pre and Post-test measuring the learning progress of the participants.

Carl D. Roehling, FAIA
President

Dear Reader:

Every day, in every newspaper in the State there is an article that connects the quality of our lives with architecture. Whether it is a school bond issue, a ground breaking announcement, or a new business coming into our community, the quality of the physical location is connected to success. You don't have to look beyond your own community or business to see it. When schools are well designed, learning is enhanced; when offices are well designed, productivity flourishes; when stores are well designed, sales increase; and when your house of worship is well designed, spirits are lifted.

Our mission at the Michigan Architectural Foundation is simple, we want every resident of the State of Michigan to understand that our quality of life is directly connected to architecture. We want everyone to have an "attitude" about architecture.

You will find architects in this Directory that can enhance the quality of your business or organization. It you want to find out more about "attitude", call us or go to our web site, michiganarchitecturalfoundation.org, to see the programs and resources.

Carl D. Roehling, FAIA
President

With our new software in place, everyone's interests are in balance.

AIA Contract Documents balance the interests of contractors, developers, lawyers, and architects. And with redesigned software, they also offer world-class simplicity. We've included familiar icons toolbars and pull-down menus to make navigation streamlined and intuitive. Microsoft® Word and PDF file-saving let you create, share, and manage documents with ease. You can share them on your network or through e-mail as either Word or PDF files. Special dialog boxes help you enter data quickly and accurately.

Enhanced storage and retrieval lets you call up project data so it can be automatically incorporated into new documents. The software uses the standard Microsoft® Word "track changes" function throughout. Plus, variances from AIA standard contract language in any document can be displayed in a special report. It's all here. And it's all easy. See for yourself. Simply download the software at www.aia.org. For more details call 1-800-365-2724.

G Forms can now be edited in Microsoft® Word.

Introduction to the 2005 Michigan Architectural Foundation Annual Report

AIA Michigan

Michael A. Mashburn, AIA
2005 President

Greetings:

Founded in 1957 by the Michigan Society of Architects, the Foundation is one of the oldest architectural foundations in the U.S. Its close links with the Michigan Society of Architects (now AIA Michigan) continue to this day despite the growing independence and strength of the Foundation. Where AIA Michigan's purpose is to serve and promote "architects", the Foundation's mission is to serve and promote good "architecture". With that goal as the focus of its mission, the foundation continues to develop and fund programs that bring public awareness of good architecture and promote quality living, learning and working environments.

Our goal is to help fund the activities and programs of related organizations that showcase or preserve good architecture. To award these grants, we need to have good sources of capital. We are on our way toward the goal of building an endowment that will be self-sustaining. T he Foundation has the fiduciary obligation to build and protect its investments so that its mission of support can continue and grow for many years to come. The economy and changes to the dues collection procedures are both a challenge to our assets.

Our assets are mainly invested in conservative money-market funds. We have experienced some rebound in those investments in 2005. Our attention to change, coupled with a slight rebound in the economy, provided for a net 7% growth in our investments in 2005. The Foundation relies on member donations for financial growth. A change in invoicing of membership renewal dues by National AIA, resulted in the elimination of the blank for voluntary donation to the Foundation that had always been a part of our State renewal form. What had always been a source of several thousands of dollars of income was lost due to the new procedures.

The Foundation's Board of Trustees pledged to refocus our efforts to match our mission statement promoting the public awareness of architecture. We continue to nurture new sources of funding and growth of our endowment. Expansion of the Board of Trustees began in 2005 by adding two new at-large trustees and three public members.

2006 will be a year of change and reorganization, continued challenge to build our financial base through careful investments, continued fund-raising efforts and reinstitution of a means for membership support. Vice president Carl Roehling is slated to take over the leadership of the organization. He has already identified a strategy for further development of the Foundation and its assets.

Michael A. Marshburn, AIA
2005 President

MAF Mission Statement

AIA Michigan

The Mission of the Michigan Architectural Foundation is to:

- Stimulate public awareness of the value of architecture.
- Advance architecture through research and education.
- Enhance the quality of life through an improved natural and built environment.

Organization

Every member of AIA Michigan is a member and shareholder in the Foundation. An elected, eleven member Board of Trustees is the present governing body for the Foundation. Recent by-law changes were made to allow growth in both numbers and influence of that Board by involving "public", non-architect members to sit on that body.

The first three public members Ralph Graham, Ben Maibach & Brenda Schneider were added to the Board in 2006. The Board is proceeding with that expansion with the eventual goal of 20 Trustees with continued representation from the AIA Michigan Board of Directors, at-large members from the profession and the new public members. The full Board will meet on a quarterly basis and an executive committee will meet more frequently to handle the operational needs of the organization. Meetings are held at various locations around the State. Trustees all serve a two-year term.

The Michigan Architectural Foundation is recognized as a tax-exempt organization as described in the Internal Revenue Code Section 501(c)(3).

Public Awareness Grants

MAF Public Awareness Chapter Grants were awarded to AIA Detroit to create and publish "A Guide to Detroit Architecture" ($1,500); to AIA Grand Valley to create and publish "AIA Guide to Grand Valley Architecture" ($1,500); to AIA Southwest Michigan to sponsor a lecture by Pulitzer Prize winning Chicago Tribune architecture critic, Blair Kamin, called, "Why Architecture Matters: Lessons from Chicago" ($1,500); and to AIA Detroit to co-sponsor a series of three public lectures with the Detroit Historical Museum ($1,500). The AIA Detroit lecture series was entitled, "Detroit's Urban Development," and featured Ken Neumann, FAIA, speaking about Charles Blessing's Detroit city plan. The AIA Southwest Michigan lecture was timed to coincide with the introduction of the "Guide to Modern Architecture of Greater Kalamazoo," which MAF supported in 2004. Both lectures resulted in collaboration with local public organizations and, through matching grants, leveraged funds received to enhance public awareness and interest in architecture.

Grant request forms are available from the MAF and were mailed to all chapter presidents in January for submission by March 31. This year, MAF did not mail grant request forms in the fall because the budget was exceeded during the spring round. Typically, grants are awarded in amounts from $500 - $1,500, and the total amount budgeted in 2005 was $5,000.

Lecture series in cooperation with the Detroit Historical Museum. This three part series was a continuation of a program that began in 2004 and was funded in part by a grant from the National AIA. It featured presentations about Albert Kahn, Minoru Yamasaki and Saarinen. The highlights this year included Kenneth Neumann, FAIA who discussed the Detroit City Plan and the influence of internationally recognized planner-architect, Charles Blessing. Another featured shopping center developer Al Taubman on Victor Gruen and the affect of the shopping mall on American Society.

Bill Zbaren and Robert Sharoff, photographer and author of the MAF sponsored book Detroit: American City, published 100 years of great architecture in the city. This high quality publication is available to the public through bookstores and on line. A new poster version of AIA Detroit, The American Institute of Architects Guide to Detroit Architecture, was published in time for the 2006 Super Bowl. The fold-out, two-color document was designed by Mike Savitski, the graphic designer of the original book. The poster was limited to 39 entries, as compared to more than 430 in the Guide, and includes a handful of buildings not included in the book for examples, the Holocaust Museum and the new Cass Technical High School, both completed since 2002. Mike's design follows the character of the Guide and thus presents a handsome companion piece. 75,000 copies will be printed and generously distributed. Angela Jeruzal of Marx Layne, shepherded the project in many talented ways; and John Gallagher, Balthazar Korab and Eric Hill helped. Both the AIA Detroit and Michigan Architectural Foundation logos appear on the poster.

Communications Committee Report
MAF newsletters, highlighting the Foundation's activities, were again distributed to all chapter presidents throughout the year, in order to inform them of the activities of the Foundation.

The MAF sponsored a several page article in the AIA Michigan Place 2005 Directory that served to update the membership and public readers on background information about the Foundation as well as current Foundation events. The MAF is an integral part of an AIA Michigan Web-site Committee that is working to improve the graphic image, organization and content of our web-site. MAF is also contributing to retaining a web design firm for this purpose. We also concluded our Branding program this year by revisiting our logo design, which has led to a reaffirmation and refinement of our previous logo that will be used to convey a more consistent image of the MAF.

Silent Auction
The Tenth Annual MAF Silent Auction was held on August 4-6, 2005 at the Grand Hotel on Mackinac Island during the AIA Michigan's Mid Summer Conference. Gracious friends and supporters of the Foundation donated items of Artwork and Furniture along with Resort Getaway Accommodations, Fine Dining and other unique entertainment experiences. Spirited bidding by our Architect members and our new AGC partners helped raise a record amount for this event.

The MAF Auction was created to raise funds to help grow the Foundation endowment. This year's event furthered that cause by raising over $9,500 for the Foundation.

Design-Build Golf Outing
The outing celebrated its 11th (and last!) year of existence with another successful event. The third year of the new Ryder Cup format pitted teams lead by Alex Ivanikiw and Mark Millich in a daylong competition.

Most importantly, the fund raising from the event has brought the endowment to over the $100,000 goal set in 1993. During this time, architecture students demonstrating exceptional leadership have received scholarship support as well. The President's Scholarship will be assured in perpetuity next year.

The outing is unique in the industry as the only event that attracts construction, architecture, engineering and owners professionals. Most of the organizations that participate have been doing so for eleven years. This loyalty bodes well for the future as proceeds are directed to other Michigan Architectural Foundation programs.

Bob Washer and Carl Roehling have been tireless volunteers and leaders for the event for 11 years!

Evans Preservation Grant
This was the 7th year of the grant named after David Evans, FAIA an ardent advocate for adaptive reuse. The 2005 Grant of $5000 was awarded to the Phoenix of the Detroit Fire Department. That group is restoring Engine 11 Fire House in Detroit. Built in 1883 at a cost of $13,600 and in active use until 1989, the building is on the National Register of Historic Places. The mission of the Phoenix includes both advocacy and charity. They have a number of community outreach programs including the Junior Fire Cadet Program.

The jury consisted of Ralph and Jeanne Graham, Lynne Merrill Francis, Dick Frank, Carl Roehling, Rae Dumke, Les Tincknell, Jennifer Radcliffe, Jacqui Evans and Kathryn Eckert.

Improvements were made to the selection process and the criteria resulting in better quality applicants for the award. The Clannad Foundation pledged their continuing financial support.

President's Scholarship
The AIA Michigan Past Presidents' Scholarship is a $3,000 award to a student in the final years of their graduate architectural program in an accredited Michigan school of architecture, and is based on a student's academic record, goals and leadership in their professional and community life. The scholarship is for an academic year tuition to their institution and is presented in the Spring. This year's recipient of the scholarship was Goyita Maribel McFalda, a graduate student at LTU.

The funding for the scholarship is by contributions from past AIA Michigan Presidents and from the Foundation sponsored golf outing held each May.

Architecture, it's Elementary

Our initiative to bring the concept of Architecture to elementary age children was launched. Almost six years ago a group of volunteer architects and educators developed a teachers guide book titled "Architecture It's Elementary." The architectural based curriculum augments the teaching of fundamentals - art, social studies, language arts, history, science and math. The material is presented in a creative and challenging way to teach students an appreciation for the planning of their communities and the built environment, with the idea that the earlier we shape tomorrow's decision makers, the better chance future generations have of ensuring the sustainability of our communities.

The program, which meets all Michigan core curriculum standards, is available free to the public as a direct download off the Foundation web site:
www.k5architecture.org.

Health Facilities Conference

The 38th annual Health Facilities Conference was held March 10 -11 at the Amway Grand Hotel in Grand Rapids. Approximately 290 participants registered for the event. Topics covered included disaster recovery, complementary medicine, and wireless technology. Speaker reviews were excellent.

Educational Facilities

In October, the Foundation's annual Educational Facilities Conference is held in cooperation with the Michigan Department of Treasury, Michigan Association of School Administrators, Michigan Association of School Boards, Michigan School Business Officials and AIA Michigan as cosponsors. The 2005 event was the 13th annual event that brings educators, builders, vendors and architects together to collaborate and promote safer built environments for our kids. Over 200 attendees participated in this year's conference and it remains the top fund-raiser for MAF. This year's conference was held at Grand Traverse Resort on October 6 & 7. Next year's event will be October 12 & 13, 2006 at the same venue.

signs define space

A person's experience within an environment has a beginning and an end. 2/90 Sign Systems creates a positive impact by understanding that the purpose of signs is to move people to, through and out of a facility. Our beautifully crafted signs work in harmony with each other to ensure a lasting impression.
